

The same evening, with the caravan and without.

Direction C is settled, and the circle has been redrawn to the brief: the sun is gone, and in its place an evening — a crescent moon and a single star over the dunes. It ships in the two versions asked for, with the camel caravan and without. Each is shown below on an A4 letterhead at true proportion, on a business card at 85 × 55 mm, on a spec-sheet header, and held small — because that is where logos fail.

SIZE The two versions are the same logo. The only real difference is how small it can go. The caravan needs room: at 60 mm on a letterhead it reads completely, and below about 10 mm the three camels merge into the ridge.

The moon has nothing in it that can close up, so that is the one for the favicon, the app icon and the avatar. Taking both — the caravan for print, the moon for screen furniture — is a normal way to run one identity and costs nothing, because they are the same mark.

THE TWO VERSIONS, SIDE BY SIDE

THE TRADE-OFF

No caravan — and the brief is right that at a large size a desert without one can look empty.

THE TRADE-OFF

Below about 10 mm the camels close up into the ridge and stop being camels. Use C1 there.

Name one, or name both.

Both are built and sitting in brand/: 24 SVG masters, 24 transparent PNGs and 18 JPGs. Two decisions are baked into the drawing, and each is one line to change. The mark is strictly two inks, with no gradient — the single-ink versions knock the whole scene out of the disc with a mask, and a gradient cannot be knocked out, so a graduated sunset would have meant the colour logo and the one-ink logo were two different drawings. And the star has four points, not five — a crescent beside a five-pointed star reads as a flag, and this is a company. Say the word on either and it changes.

01 Name C1 or C2. If both appeal for different jobs, say so — the caravan on printed matter and the moon everywhere small is a normal arrangement, and it is not two logos.

02 Everything unused gets deleted — directions A and B, and the first version of C with the plain sun — so nobody picks the wrong mark off a shared drive by accident.

03 The site follows. It still carries the earlier sun seal in four places — the navigation bar, the menu, the footer sign-off and the favicon. The chosen version replaces all four, and the typographic header on all sixteen spec sheets.

04 Then the descriptor. It reads FOODSTUFF & BEVERAGES TRADING, taken from the registered name. If the cards and letterhead should say something else, that is a one-line change.
